the theory of literary worlds has become increasingly important in comparative and world literatures but how are the often contradictory elements of eastern and western literatures to cohere in the new worlds such contact creates drawing on the latest work in philosophical logic and analytic asian philosophy this monograph proposes a new model of literary worlds that is best suited to comparative literature dealing with western and east asian traditions unlike much discussion of world literature anchored in north american traditions featured here is the transnational work of artists philosophers and poets writing in english french japanese and mandarin in the twentieth century rather than imposing sharp borders this book suggests that vague boundaries link eastern and western literary works and traditions and that degrees of distance can better help us to see the multiple dimensions that both distinguish and join together literary worlds east and west as such it enables us to grasp not only how east asian and western writers translate one another s works into their own languages and traditions but also how modern writers east and west modify their own traditions in order to make them fit in the new constellation of literary worlds brought about by the complex flow of literary information across twentieth century eurasia reducing food loss and waste are important policy objectives prominently featured in the united nation s sustainable development goals to optimally design interventions targeted at reducing losses it is important to know where losses are concentrated between the farm and fork this paper measures farmlevel postharvest losses for three main crops maize soy and groundnuts among 1 200 households in malawi farmers answered a detailed questionnaire designed to learn about losses during harvest and transport processing and storage and which measures both total losses and reductions in crop quality the findings indicate that fewer than half of households report suffering losses conditional on growing each crop in addition conditional on losses occurring the loss averages between 5 and 12 percent of the farmer s total harvest compared to nationally representative data that measure losses using a single survey question this study documents a far greater percentage of farmers experiencing losses though the unconditional proportion lost is similar we find that losses are concentrated in harvest and processing activities for groundnuts and maize for soy they are highest during processing existing interventions have primarily targeted storage activities however these results suggest that targeting other activities may be worthwhile attending to non fiction texts from india and the global south migrant epistemologies identifies migratory contact zones as sites on which contrary epistemic stances may co exist despite their differences in a symbiotic ecology given the increasing traffic between differentially empowered groups around the world their distinct cognitive practices must often meet one another head on manisha basu argues that in the best of such circumstances migrants and hosts open themselves to unlearning their own dominant worldviews and animating other ways of knowing unlike accounts of migration that accentuate the violences involved in the movements of peoples this book foregrounds relatively peaceable but still complex migratory encounters that imagine an epistemologically diverse world resulting in social and environmental justice
